ClearOne Communications Names Vice President of Services

SALT LAKE CITY, March 19, 2002--ClearOne Communications Inc. (Nasdaq: CLRO) has named Andrew S. Fellows vice president of services. He is responsible for the growth of ClearOne's Services Division, which is comprised of conferencing services, business consulting services, and technical support and training through the company's Professional Services Group.

Fellows has more than 13 years experience in marketing and selling for both technology-based and service-based companies. He joins ClearOne from the international professional services firm Ernst & Young LLP, where he ran the business development and client appointment telemarketing groups, the largest of such groups within Ernst & Young. Most recently, he was area director of sales for the Mid-Atlantic States.

Prior to Ernst & Young, Fellows spent seven years with IBM in the company's personal computer and software divisions, where worked specifically with IBM's technology channel partners. He achieved the highest honor in IBM sales and marketing in 1991 when he was elected to the Golden Circle. Fellows earned a bachelor's degree in economics and computer science from Middlebury College (Middlebury, Vt.).

"Andy has a successful history of selling and managing service channels very similar to those ClearOne is currently developing," said Frances Flood, president and chief executive officer of ClearOne. "He keenly understands the company's business model, and we look forward to him driving continued growth in our Services Division."
